

There are good reasons why people are not allowed to say four letter words on radio and TV. Because they may offend people.

I am offended if our government regulated FCC would not stop the Sinclair company from airing "Stolen Honor", a film against a candidate very close to the election. This film is not news. It is not journalism. It is opinion, and is very one sided.

The FCC is not focusing enough attention on this monopoly-run media channels, and should be more involved in creating diverse programming.

If Sinclair feels that "Stolen Honor" is a valid image to appear on television so close to the election, I suggest they also be provided with the film "Up River", as a counter part.

Thank you.
